What is Cannabis Essential Oil?

Cannabis essential oil is derived from the flowers and upper leaves of the cannabis plant. This oil is extracted using steam distillation, a process that maintains the natural compounds found in the plant. Unlike cannabis oil that contains cannabinoids like THC, cannabis essential oil primarily consists of terpenes and other aromatic compounds. These components are responsible for the unique fragrance of the oil and contribute to its reported therapeutic properties.

Understanding the Components

Terpenes are a significant component of cannabis essential oil. These organic compounds are found in many plants and are responsible for their distinct odors. In cannabis, terpenes not only determine how the plant smells but can also influence its effects. Some common terpenes found in cannabis essential oil include myrcene, limonene, and pinene. These compounds have their own sets of potential benefits, from anti-inflammatory properties to mood enhancement.
